

MANAGEMENT AND ORGANIZATIONAL LEADERSHIP

Improve Your Leadership and Organizational Development Skills

Established in 2001 to meet the growing demand of education, National University System is a network of nonprofit institutions dedicated to offering innovative and relevant educational programs to a diverse population of students, serving the needs of working adults.

National University System includes three institutes of higher learning:

- National University
- City University of Seattle
- Northcentral University

NUS offers degree programs related to management and organizational leadership at each of our affiliates. Our management and organizational leadership programs prepare graduates to seek employment in a wide range of settings, including hospitals, health care systems, government, and nonprofit organizations. Programs prepare you for a variety of careers in administration, marketing, communications, advertising, fundraising, business development, strategic planning, organizational improvement, human resources, and leadership. Upon graduation, you'll be prepared to continue your education and advance your professional career.

Program Highlights:

- Demonstrate effective communication skills needed in a professional environment
- Develop skills needed to build or improve business
- Develop skills and learn techniques for planning, implementing, and managing organizational change
- Understand ethics, responsibility, and legal obligations in business
- Learn to work with the strengths and weaknesses of diverse groups
- Explore how to reach ethical decisions, weighing multiple pieces of information and legal/regulatory requirements
- Understand how to write, speak, and communicate using a variety of business formats
- Learn to manage and lead organizational change
- Assess and manage ethical issues, risk, and opportunities within multicultural organizations
- Apply a diverse set of knowledge and skills to develop critical thinking, synthesize information, manage conflict, and build problem-solving capacity
